Zootropolis was a modern city where mammals of all shapes and sizes lived together peacefully. And Judy, the city's very first rabbit police officer, couldn't wait to start work there.

But on Judy's first day, Chief Bogo assigned her to parking duty! Judy was disappointed – she wanted to investigate the recent mysterious disappearance of 14 predators from the city.

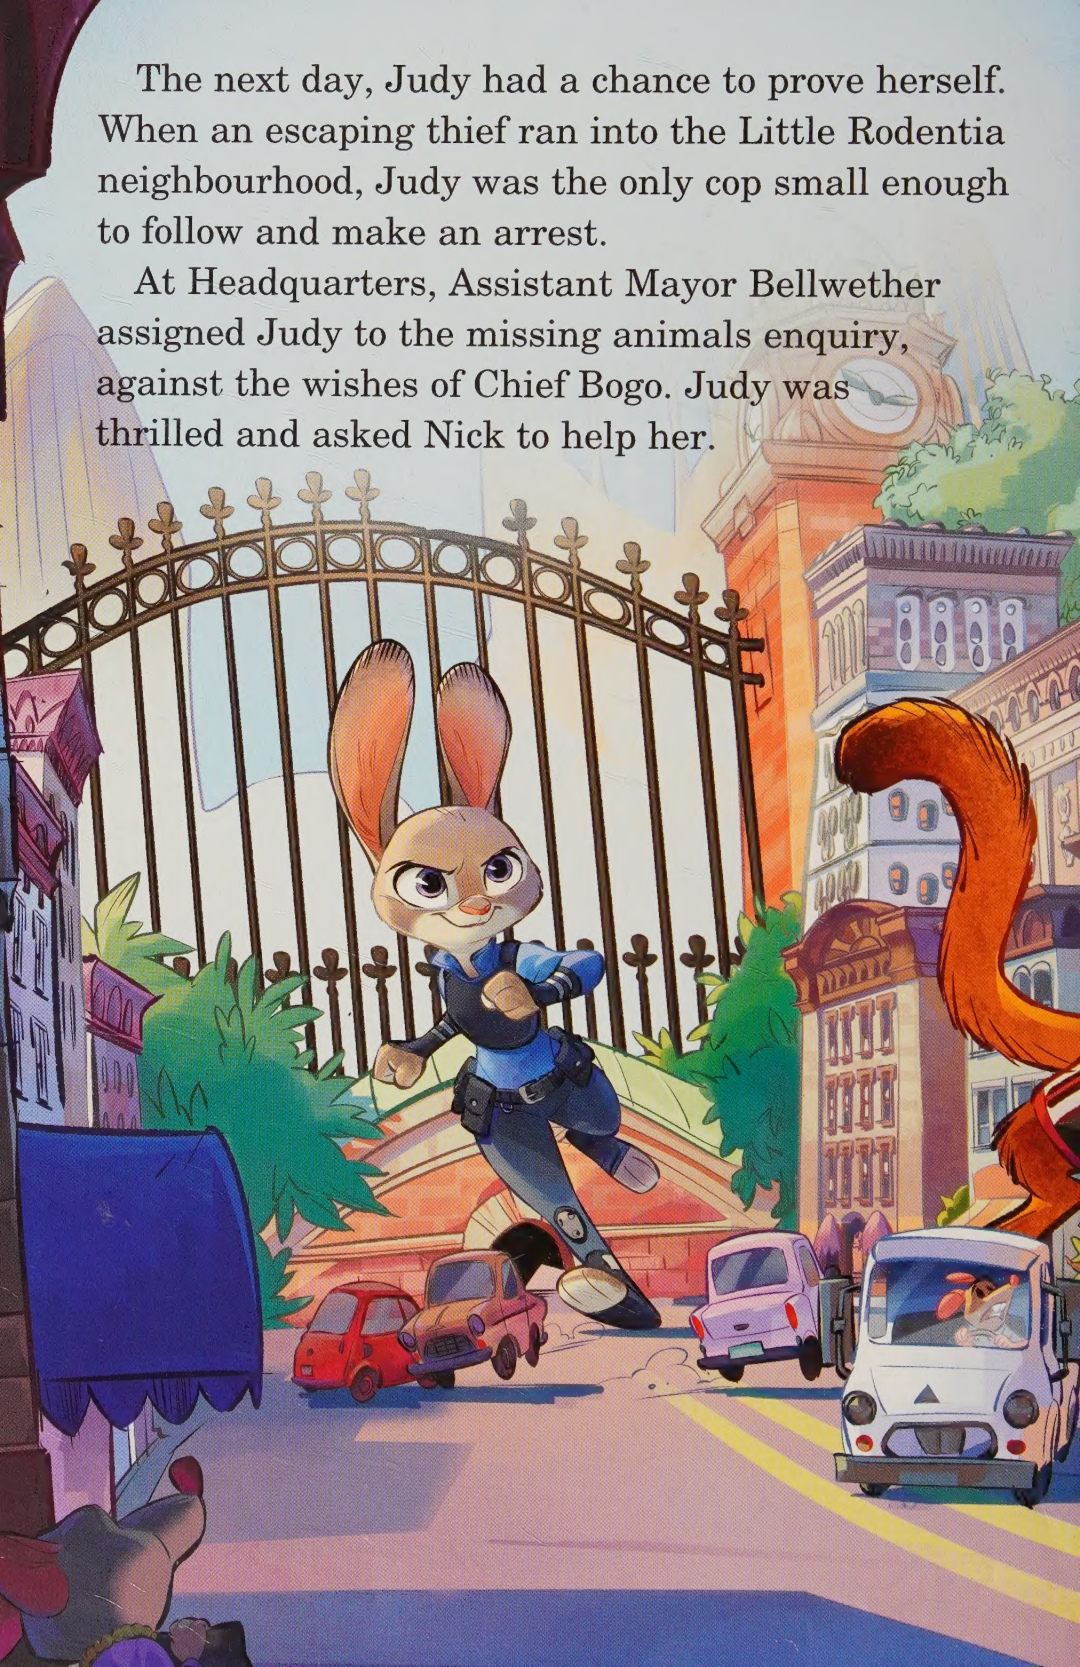
During one of her shifts, Judy came across a crafty fox called Nick Wilde. She watched in amazement as Nick bought an elephant-sized Jumbo pop, then melted it down and refroze it into lots of tiny "pawpsicles". Nick then sold them at a huge profit to lemmings.

"It's called a hustle, sweetheart," Nick explained to Judy. Then he called her a dumb bunny for believing she could be a real cop.

PAWPSIC

The next day, Judy had a chance to prove herself. When an escaping thief ran into the Little Rodentia neighbourhood, Judy was the only cop small enough to follow and make an arrest.

At Headquarters, Assistant Mayor Bellwether assigned Judy to the missing animals enquiry, against the wishes of Chief Bogo. Judy was thrilled and asked Nick to help her.



With Nick's help, Judy retraced the steps of Otterton, one of the missing animals. He had last been seen in Mr Big's limousine. Mr Big was a powerful crime boss and Otterton, a florist, had been hired to provide the flowers for Mr Big's daughter's wedding.

Judy and Nick went to interview Manchas, the limo driver. The jaguar seemed scared when he explained that Otterton had yelled something about "night howlers", then turned into a wild beast.

Suddenly, Manchas went savage, too! Nick and Judy ran for their lives. They called for backup, but by the time the police arrived, Manchas had vanished.

"We must find him!" said Judy to Nick.

Then Nick spotted some traffic cameras. Would they have recorded what happened to Manchas?

With Bellwether's help, they looked at traffic videos and discovered that Manchas had been picked up by a black van filled with wolves.

Judy and Nick tracked the van to an abandoned hospital on the edge of the city. They sneaked in past the wolf guards – and found all the missing animals, including Otterton and Manchas. And all of them were completely savage!

Nick and Judy hid when they heard someone come in. It was Mayor Lionheart! Judy filmed Lionheart plotting with a doctor to cover up the fact that the animals had become savage.

Judy called for help and soon, Lionheart was arrested. He was led away in handcuffs.

"But I only locked up these animals to protect the city!" protested the mayor.

POLICE

Overnight, Judy was famous. At a press conference, Judy said that the only animals who had turned savage were predators – perhaps it was part of their biology?

Nick was angry – did Judy think he was dangerous, too? Soon, the whole city was divided, as prey and predators turned against each other.

Judy had to find out the truth. She persuaded Nick to help her again and soon, they discovered that the predators had been sent crazy by a serum produced from flowers.

The pair found that the serum was being made in a hidden lab in a subway station.

Nick and Judy seized the serum and jumped into a subway train. After a crazy chase, the train crashed, but Nick and Judy escaped with the serum and ran to the Natural History Museum.

But Bellwether, the new mayor, was waiting for them and took the case of serum.

Bellwether was behind the whole plot! Triumphantly, she explained her plan to make prey afraid of predators – then the prey animals, with their greater numbers, could take over Zootropolis. And Bellwether would be their leader!

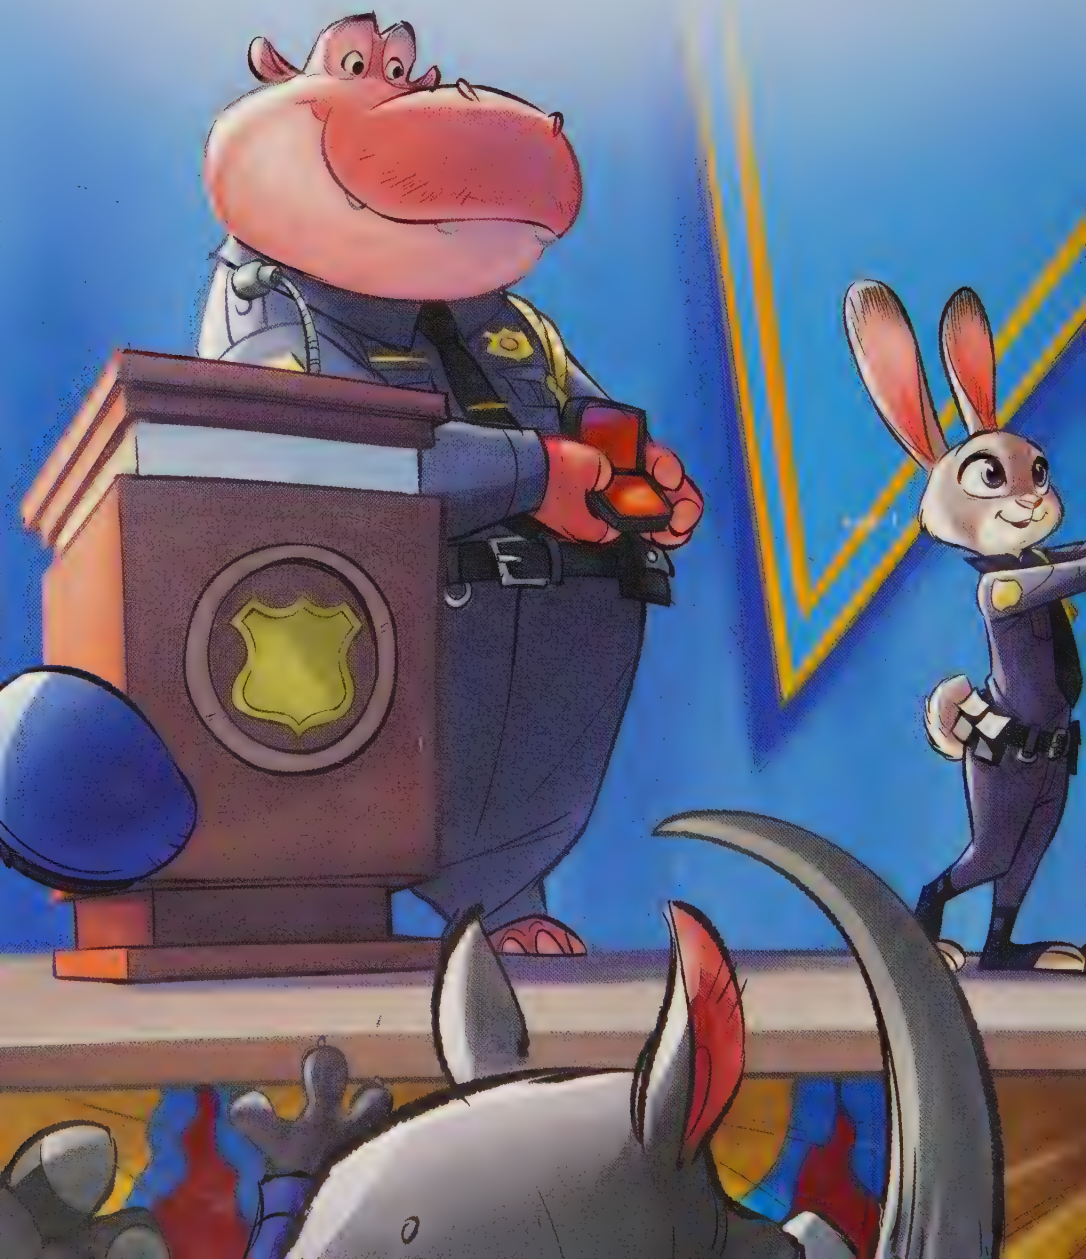
She shot Nick with a serum-filled dart. Nick growled threateningly at Judy – he was going savage!

But then Nick stopped growling. He wasn't savage, after all! He and Judy had swapped the serum for blueberry juice – and they had recorded every word of Bellwether's confession!

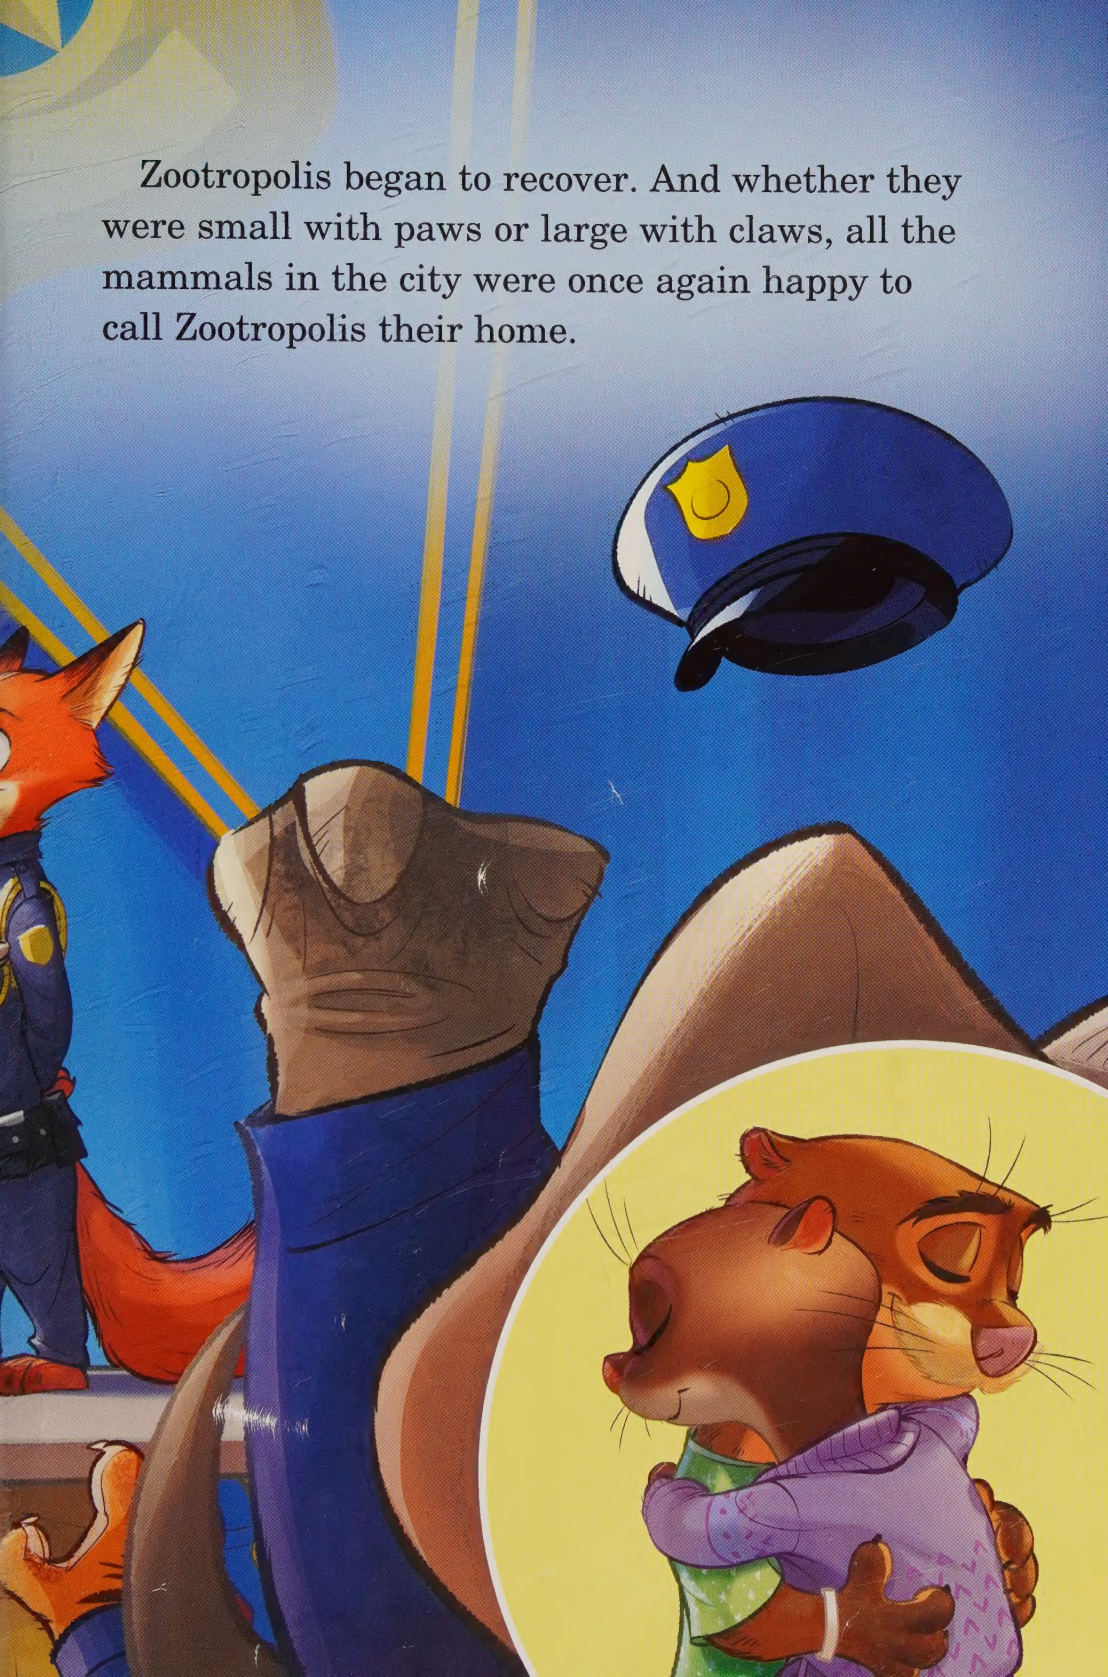
"It's called a hustle, sweetheart," Judy told Bellwether as Chief Bogo and his officers arrived.

Soon after that, Nick graduated from the police academy and he and Judy became partners.

Doctors found a cure for the infected mammals and Otterton went home to his family.



Zootropolis began to recover. And whether they were small with paws or large with claws, all the mammals in the city were once again happy to call Zootropolis their home.



Animals are going missing in the city of Zootropolis and rookie cop Judy Hopps longs for the chance to crack the case. With the help of streetwise fox Nick Wilde, Judy tracks a ruthless villain who will stop at nothing to take control of the city. But who is it?
